

FRAUKE BOHGE

With her sensitive approach, Bohge makes unknown places familiar and transforms the essence of a place into a direct emotive impression. Common to the individual works is the recurring and lavish use of black and white, which leads only rarely to stark contrasts and more often to shimmering or dusty, harmonic grey tones. The process of painting with colour on paper or canvas becomes an aesthetic act, in line with her aesthetic perception of realities.

In her most recent works, the painter also deals with the human figure: strength and weakness, remoteness and presence, as with the cityscapes and landscapes, it is about ambivalence and the relativity of place and time. In addition, she continues to develop her preference for materials on canvas and works with textiles of different properties and origins, sewing some onto the canvas.

Bohge (born 1983) lives and works in Berlin.
